Vertivo Elevators — Multi-Platform Ad Expansion Report

What's happening: We've been running Meta ads for Vertivo for few months.

What we did: We checked what other elevator companies in Bangalore are doing — Nibav, Standermark, Elite Elevators. Turns out all of them are already running Google Search ads and YouTube ads. Vertivo is not there yet. So we're actually behind, not just "exploring new options."

What we recommend, and why:

First priority — Google Search ads. When someone is planning to spend ₹10-20 lakhs on an elevator, they Google it first. Things like "home elevator cost Bangalore." Right now, when people search this, Vertivo doesn't show up — but competitors do. This is the easiest win because these people are already ready to buy, they're just searching for who to buy from.

Second priority — YouTube ads. An elevator is something people want to see before they trust it. They want to see how it looks, how it's installed, if it's safe.

Video does this better than photos. It won't directly bring in leads like Search will, but it builds trust — so when they later see a Meta ad or a Search ad, they're more likely to click and enquire. One condition: we need good video content for this, not stock footage, otherwise it won't work.

Third — LinkedIn ads, but we need one answer first. LinkedIn only makes sense if Vertivo also wants to sell to architects, builders, and developers — not just individual homeowners. That's a business decision only the client can answer. If yes, LinkedIn is actually a great opportunity because no competitor is using it. If no, it's not worth the money. So before we spend anything here, we need to ask the client this one question.

Fourth — Google Display ads. This is a small add-on. It's cheap, it reuses content we already have, and it just keeps Vertivo visible to people who've already interacted with our other ads.

Meta ads continue as usual — no changes there.
